

Original Source:
<https://bioresonance.com/>

How bioresonance can really help you and your patients

Bioresonance, testing, therapy and energy medicine

Who are we? Bicom UK are the sole distributors in the UK & Ireland for the Bicom range of bioresonance machines manufactured by Regumed in Germany.

But what is Bioresonance therapy?

If you are seriously ill then you need to consult your local health professionals but, in addition, a growing number of people in the UK are discovering the benefits of bioresonance therapy. There are thousands of accounts where patients have become frustrated with conventional medicine and can testify to the effectiveness of the treatment and diagnosis offered by bioresonance. With over 17,000 Bicom devices sold worldwide there are now many holistic practitioners who are treating people on a daily basis with conditions such as depression, hay-fever, allergies, digestive and skin problems along with many other conditions.

We are faced on a daily basis with an increasing amount of environmental stressors and pathogens, some of which have become resistant to antibiotics. Parasites are one example – they have been known to cause many of the conditions that people suffer with in modern society and our pets also suffer with infestations. Energy medicine machines such as the Bicom have been used for over 35 years to try and eliminate these invaders without the use of drugs. In addition, bioresonance has supported many cancer patients, along with conventional treatment, with ground breaking results. Bio energetic medicine has even been effective in challenging cases such as those suffering from depression and addiction. As more people see and hear the success stories associated with bioresonance, more and more therapists, doctors, vets and dentists are turning to this effective and non-invasive complementary health therapy. Bicom are proud to represent the world's leading manufacturer of bioresonance testing and treatment machines, the Bicom by Regumed.

This website explains more about bioresonance, its history, bio-energetic testing, how it works, whether there are side-effects and why you may not have heard about it. If you own a Bicom device already then you will find many pages of useful advice and training. It can be complicated to explain to those without an understanding of biophysics or who are new to energy medicine, but we have many supporting documents and videos for you to review. If you would like to find out more, please read this explanation on bioresonance and how it works in relation to other things we are familiar with. If you are interested in purchasing a Bicom bioresonance treatment machine then please visit the products page.

Bioresonance a brief introduction

This section only provides general educational information on the technique. Practitioners who would like more detailed technical material should contact us.

BICOM bioresonance therapy is a non-invasive, gentle therapy making it suitable for children and babies and even sensitive patients. Animals, from guinea pigs to horses, can also benefit from the use of Bicom devices. Because it uses biophysics -the physics of the body – rather than biochemistry, practitioners may find they can use less medication and herbal remedies.

Original Source:

<https://bioresonance.com/>

Treatment on a bioresonance machine does not cure an illness; it assists the body to reduce its toxin or stress load and so helps to restore 'self-regulation', allowing the body to heal itself. It is best known for treating environmental stress factors that may be contributing to a person's illness, such as 'electrosmog', radiation, parasites and other pathogens. Some common symptoms where environmental stressors are at play include general aches and pains, tiredness, digestive upsets, skin blemishes or just a general feeling of "not being quite right". Many people often wonder why, despite our scientific advances and affluence, more and more people struggle with maintaining good health. Some disorders are given a 'label' but many can't be treated; they are simply managed. Many of these disorders and syndromes have steadily increased over the last 20 years, which begs the question whether there might be environmental stress factors involved.

How Bioresonance Therapy Was Developed

Bioresonance therapy has its roots in the 1970s with Dr Franz Morell, a German medical doctor who used homeopathy in his practice. Homeopathy is believed to be an 'information therapy' as it is based on the fundamental concept that water has a memory. As such, homeopathic remedies use information from substances diluted many, many times in water, with the memory of the original substance being retained in that water. Morell wondered if it might be possible to develop a kind of 'electronic homeopathy' by using electromagnetic signals taken from a patient's body. After all, our bodies are 70% water and so 'information' should be stored there if the water memory theory was correct. Morell began working with his electronics engineer son-in-law, Erich Rasche on developing such a therapy device. Together with bio-physicist Dr Ludger Mersmann, in 1977 they developed a filter to separate 'unhealthy' and 'healthy' electromagnetic signals coming from the body. This led to a biofeedback therapy device called the MORA using electrodes on the skin. These picked up energetic information, modified it and fed it back to the patient to strengthen the 'healthy' energies in the body and help weaken and eliminate the 'unhealthy' or 'disease' energies.

This early bioresonance device required tedious, manual setting up and Hans Brügemann, a colleague of Morell, saw the advantage of using a built-in computer to automate operation and make it easier to use. In 1987 he set up his own company (now Regumed GmbH) to make such a device. He called his device the BICOM and coined the term "bioresonance therapy" for the technique. Since then, Regumed has made continuous technical improvements to the BICOM, some of which have involved collaborating with biophysics researchers including Prof Cyril Smith (UK) and Prof Fritz Albert Popp (Germany). Current Bicom device models are shown on the "Products" page.

Today, there are over 8000 BICOM devices in Germany, (17,000 worldwide in 80 countries) used by both medical practitioners in private practice and by complementary therapists. Bioresonance therapy is widely used in other German-speaking countries such as Austria and Switzerland and also in the Netherlands and the UK. It is starting to become more well-known outside Europe, especially in China, where BICOM devices are used in government hospitals*, primarily children's hospitals. In other countries, including Australia, bioresonance is seen as a complementary therapy.

Original Source:

<https://bioresonance.com/>

* Note: this should not be interpreted as “endorsement” by the Chinese government.

Concepts of Illness

As recently as the mid-1800s, people had no realistic ideas about the origins of illness. Then, following the work of Louis Pasteur, Robert Koch and others, the “germ theory” of medicine was accepted, based on the idea that a specific germ causes the same disease in all patients under all conditions. However, a respected contemporary of Pasteur’s, the physician Jacques Antoine Bechamp, felt the germ theory was oversimplified and argued that diseases were the result of multiple factors unique to each individual’s internal status and external environment. The debate continues to the present day. The multicausal view is well articulated by Hans Seyle MD in his book “The Stress of Life”.

These days, we live hectic, fast-paced lives. A vast array of technical appliances, incredibly fast means of transport and communication and any amount of fast, processed foods and chemical products make our everyday lives so much easier. The technology we have today could barely have been imagined 50 or 60 years ago. As much as we enjoy all of this, some of us are paying a price for it.

When It All Becomes Too Much

Example of stress building up in a barrel and when it overflows, physical symptoms showImagine the body as an empty barrel at birth. Then, with each contact with stressing substances in the environment, a little more is added to the barrel. When the regulatory mechanisms in our bodies are functioning properly they can usually prevent the barrel from overflowing by processing and eliminating the stressors. In some people, however, the regulatory system cannot cope and the barrel overflows, resulting in illness.

How Does BICOM Bioresonance Therapy Work?

Discoveries made in quantum physics have revealed that all particles of matter share the characteristics of both waves and particles. This means that all substances, and therefore all cells in all parts of the body, as well as viruses, bacteria, pollen, toxins, etc. emit electromagnetic waves. Depending upon their nature, all substances have their specific wavelength or frequency with highly individual characteristics. This is known as a frequency pattern which can be detected by a bicom machine.

Cells and Matter

Research into biophotons is based on the assumption that cells communicate with one another by means of “flashes of light” (photon radiation) at certain ‘resonant’ frequencies. Biophysics researchers believe that the biophysical level of the body controls the biochemical level and hence the structure of matter and the structure of organs. These complex concepts have been expertly explained in layman’s terms by the UK medical journalist, Lynne McTaggart in part one of her book “The Field” which includes interviews with several of the key scientists working in biophysics.

The BICOM device uses frequency patterns taken either from the body in the original biofeedback mode or from substances that are stressing the body. When from the body, it either uses electrodes making skin contact or magnetic electrodes to collect information from deeper inside the body or from on top of light clothing. The BICOM separates these waves into harmonious (healthy) and disharmonious (unhealthy) components. The healthy waves can be boosted and sent back to the body to strengthen normal functions, while the unhealthy waves are 'inverted' or turned upside down by an electronic mirror circuit before returning them to reduce their negative effect on the body. What actually happens is more complicated but the 'inverted' wave cancels the harmful wave that was stressing the body's energetic system. You can see this effect at the beach where a wave reflected from a rock flattens the next incoming wave. The same electronic principle is used in noise-cancelling headphones for use on aircraft.

Original Source:

<https://bioresonance.com/>

patient having therapy on bicom show how inversion works

A typical 60 minute treatment session will combine several therapy programs, some using information from the body and some from substances. The altered information is played back into the body through a large electromagnetic mat that covers the patient's spine. During treatment, the body is 'stimulated' when it resonates with the healing frequency from the BICOM.

Example 1: Let's say there are symptoms like a runny nose and a cough. Body secretions (saliva, mucous etc) can be used as the 'input' information along with an electrode at the throat. These secretions have both healthy and unhealthy aspects. The BICOM picks up the energetic information from this, and then internal filters separate the 'healthy' frequencies from the 'unhealthy' frequencies, amplifying the healthy energy and calming down or cancelling out the 'unhealthy' frequency.

Example 2: Toxins have no healthy aspect. Let's say a mercury stress has been detected. A homeopathic vial containing the mercury information is used as the input. The mercury frequency pattern is run through the 'mirror-circuit' which inverts it. It literally mirrors the image of the frequency pattern and the mirrored frequency is fed back into the body to weaken or cancel the mercury information.

How Well Tolerated is Bioresonance Therapy?

Fewer and fewer patients are prepared to simply pop a pill when they feel unwell. People who are careful of their health and want to act responsibly in health matters are looking for alternatives. This is evident from the press portal run by DAK, one of Germany's leading health funds. There is plenty of evidence to show that despite great advances in medicine, chronic disease is on the increase. How many children do you know with Food Intolerances, Asthma, Skin problems and other conditions? A holistic approach can produce results not experienced when just treating the actual symptom.

An increasing number of patients want to be involved in decisions about their fate rather than passively accepting prescriptions and medication. In the survey "The Germans and their Attitude to Illness and Health" conducted by the Allensbach Demoscopic Institute in 2000, around 70% of respondents complained that too few mainstream medical practitioners take an interest in naturopathy and alternative medicine.

The Swiss Academy of Medical Sciences (SAMW) discovered back in 2001 in its "New trends in medicine" project that increasingly people were turning away from scientifically based medicine and seeking help from complementary medicine.

Original Source:

<https://bioresonance.com/>

The TNS Emnid Study "On the Future of Health" also shows that 2/3 of the population often find unconventional methods of healing better than orthodox medicine although they do not regard these methods as scientifically proven unlike orthodox medicine.

In the vast majority of cases Bioresonance therapy (BRT) is very well tolerated. It has been applied to a wide range of people, from babies to mature adults, for over 25 years. Regumed has risk management procedures in place to ensure patient safety and no serious side-effects have been reported. For those who require detoxification, treatment can sometimes lead to reactions for a short period of time, such as headache, slight nausea or tiredness. Some people feel tired for 24 hours after the treatment. These effects can be reduced by drinking plenty of clean, preferably filtered, or low mineral content water to help flush out the toxins.

Any of the above after effects are actually seen as good signs in naturopathy, even if they are a little uncomfortable, as it is evidence of a healing process. Although it may feel like nothing is happening during a treatment things are happening on the inside and these signs are an indicator that the body is using the information received from the BICOM.